Foreword

This book, called "Astitva: The Power of Women's Education: Transforming Lives Through Learning", is a beautiful book which shows the deep effect education is capable of bringing to woman's heritage. While flipping through its pages, we immerse ourselves in a remarkable journey that is not simply a collection of articles but rather a hearty and genuine presentation of breaking the barriers, revolutionizing womanhood by carving their identity and empowering woman.

In history, the female tone was hidden, marginalized, and their voices everlastingly deleted from any narrative. In many regions of even our own country, women are being denied education; some might have been blessed enough to have access to basic education, but it certainly does not provide them with equality in other spheres of life. It is time for women to pick up that opportunity to articulate and physically demonstrate their rights in society by expression of information.

Education is the best weapon that aids these women to face and beat all odds, conferring them with courage to rise above societal norms and expectations. It opens the new paths for them, fueled their aspirations, and let them stand on their own feet. Histories, stories, and real metamorphoses transpired by women into beings of dignity abound at this collection poured on paper.

The chapters in this book pertain not only to subjects or ideas but also as an invitation to connect, to reflect, and be inspired. It is essential for us to recognize the uncontested potential that every single woman is endowed with, and it is our duty to create an environment of supporting them on their journey into self-empowerment and discovery. Let 'Astitva' guide them towards knowing the power of truly educating a better and brighter future for all women.

My best wishes to Dr. Neha Khatri, Dr. Neema Bisht and Dr. Akshita Jain for release of this book.
